	The foundation of the CEDR Program is the support to remote communities in the development, maintenance, and management of a Community Energy Plan (CEP). The CEDR Program has been designed to support remote communities on their CEP's for the duration of the Program. This means remote communities that do not have a CEP will have a CEP developed as a first step in the Program. Remote communities that have older CEPs can have their CEPs updated through the Program; likewise, remote communities that have CEPs that do not meet the full criteria identified by the Program can update their CEPs to address these gaps. Remote communities that have completed a CEP that meets all Program criteria (whether these CEPs were developed through the Program or prior to Program launch) will receive energy management support, including regular updates to CEPs.
